

We asked AI to build a site. The best part was the bug report.

It made the brand calls itself, and said so before building.

Build my site to match this reference. Use original branding. Do not copy theirs.

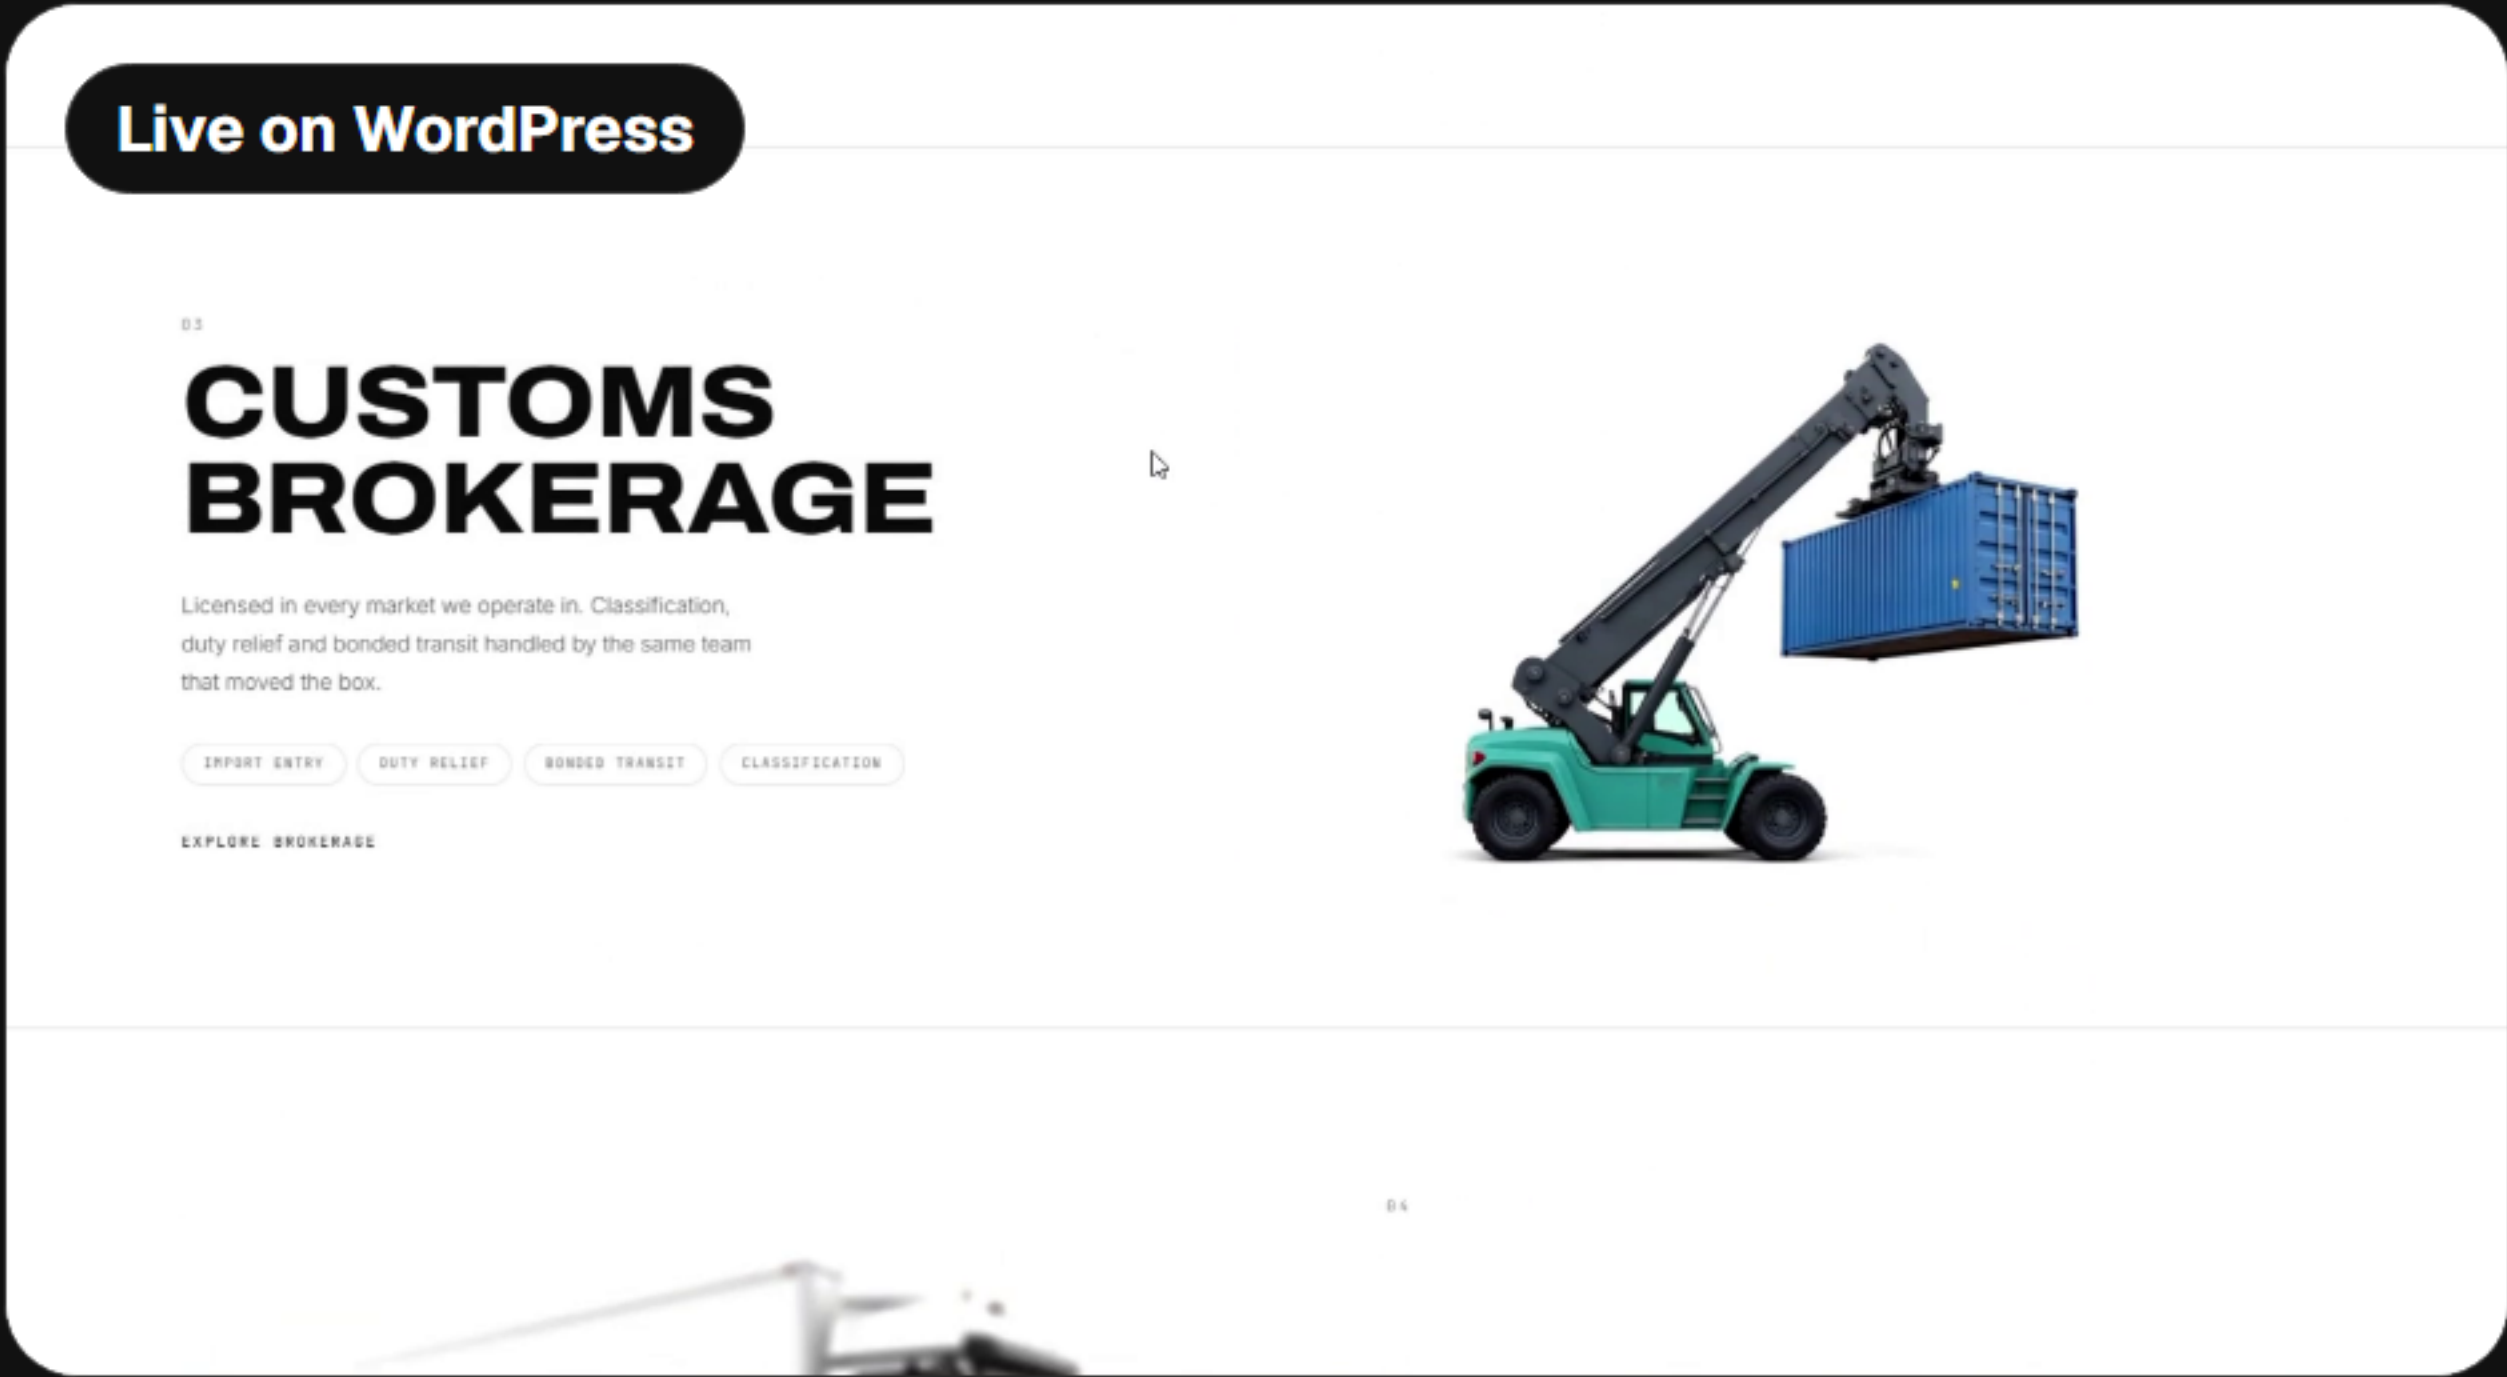

Going with my own calls then. Here's the direction I'm building:

Brand: Meridian Freight, tagline "One operator. Every leg of the journey."

Palette: near-monochrome black and white, electric blue accent

Type: Archivo Expanded display, JetBrains Mono labels, Inter body

Then it built the page,
section by section,
with real scroll motion.

Then it caught its own bugs.

FROM THE AGENT'S BUILD REPORT

- ▶  WordPress escaped & inside the widget script, which silently stopped the motion engine. Rewritten without ampersands.
-  clip-path: inset(100%) meant the mask reveal could never fire. Moved the clip to an inner wrapper.
-  A transform on the fixed header trapped the mobile menu. Moved it to an inner wrapper.

And it told us what wasn't finished.

Worth knowing

The insight cards are static rather than real posts.

The contact details and accreditation claims are placeholders to swap for your real ones.

Would you trust an AI that reports its own bugs?

A. Yes, if it shows its work like this

B. Only after my own review

C. Not yet

Tell us in the comments.
